

A close-up photograph of two vibrant orange butterflies resting on a light-colored, textured rock surface. The butterfly in the foreground is positioned lower and to the left, with its wings spread, showing detailed vein patterns. The second butterfly is positioned higher and to the right, partially overlapping the first. The background is a soft-focus green, suggesting foliage. The text is overlaid in white, bold, sans-serif font across the upper and middle portions of the image.

Ezekiel 42:05 Now the upper chambers were shorter: for the galleries were higher than these, than the lower, and than the middlemost of the building.