

A close-up photograph of a field of baby's breath flowers (Gypsophila paniculata). The flowers are small, white, and numerous, scattered across thin green stems. The background is a soft-focus green, suggesting a dense field of similar flowers. Overlaid on the upper portion of the image is the text of Job 16:05 in a white, serif font.

Job 16:05 But I would strengthen you with my mouth, and the moving of my lips should assuage your grief .
