

A close-up photograph of a vast number of small, light-colored seashells, likely clams or mussels, scattered across a dark, wet beach. The shells are densely packed, creating a textured, shimmering surface. The lighting is bright, highlighting the smooth, rounded shapes and the intricate patterns on the shells. The background is a dark, almost black, wet sand, which makes the light-colored shells stand out prominently.

Luke 16:07 Then said he to another,
And how much owest thou? And he said, An hundred measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore.
