

A close-up, high-angle photograph of a field of golden wheat. The stalks are densely packed and show signs of being ripe, with some heads beginning to bow under their weight. The lighting is warm, suggesting late afternoon or early morning, which enhances the golden-brown tones of the grain. The background is a soft-focus expanse of the same wheat field, creating a sense of depth and abundance.

Joshua 21:12 But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, gave they to Caleb the son of Jephunneh for his possession.